A Prescription for Health in an Overtreated America
Nortin M. Hadler, M.D.

At a time when access to health care in the United States is being widely debated, Nortin Hadler argues that an even more important issue is being overlooked: that before we commit to paying for whatever pharmaceutical companies and the medical establishment tell us we need, American consumers need to adopt an attitude of skepticism and arm themselves with enough information to make some of their own decisions about what care is truly necessary.

If That Ever Happens to Me

Making Life and Death Decisions after Terri Schiavo

Lois Shepherd

Every day, thousands of people quietly face decisions as agonizing as those made famous in the Terri Schiavo case. Lois Shepherd looks behind labels like "starvation," "care," or "medical treatment" to consider what care and feeding really mean, when feeding tubes might be removed, and why disability groups, the faithful, and even the dying themselves often suggest end-of-life solutions that they might later regret. She provides evidence that demanding letter-perfect documents can actually weaken, rather than bolster, patient choice.
